Is home depot valued under or exceeded? Home Depot's stock valuations are incredibly difficult and any indicators must be seen as part of the bigger picture of Home Depot's overall performance, however, analysts often use some key indicators to help measure the value of the stock. Home Depot's P/E ratio, home depot's current share price divided by eps (EPS) over the last 12 months, provides Trailing Price/Revenue Ratio In other words, Home Depot shares a trading average of about 25x of its recent earnings, which is relatively low compared to the 12-month P/E ratio trailing for the NASDAQ 100 at the end of 2019 (27.29). Home Depot's PEG ratio, price/income-to-growth ratio, can be calculated by dividing the P/E ratio with growth - so that 2.2972, the low ratio can be interpreted, meaning that the stock provides better value, while a higher ratio can be interpreted, which means that the stock has worse value. The PEG ratio provides a broader perspective on the P/E ratio, as it provides more insight into Home Depot 21's future earnings by accounting for growth, it can help you if you compare the stock prices of several high-growth companies. There are many ways this level of interest in short-term Home Depot stock can be assessed. Home Depot's short-term interest ratio (SIR) is the amount of Home Depot shares currently divided by the average volume of Home Depot shares traded daily (most recently about 4.2 million shares). In this case, Home Depot's short-term interest can be expressed as 0.01% of the outstanding shares (for every 100,000 existing Home Depot shares, approximately 10 shares currently held) or 0.0071% of the shares on par (for every 100,000 Home Depot shares available, approximately 10 shares currently held) or 0.0071% of the par shares (for every 100,000 Home Depot shares available, approximately 10 shares currently held) or 0.0071% of the shares on par (for every 100,000 Home Depot shares available, approximately 10 shares currently held) or 0.0071% of the par-off shares (for every 100,000 Home Depot shares available, approximately 10 shares currently held) or 0.0071% of the par shares (for every 100,000 Home Depot shares available, approximately 10 shares currently held) or 0.0071% of the par shares (for every 100,000 Home Depot shares available, approximately 10 shares currently held). Find out more about how you can shorten The Home Depot's environmental, social and governance criteria to save the environmental, social and governance criteria (also known as ESG) into a series of three factors used to measure sustainability and the social impact of companies such as home depots. When it comes to lower ESG scores, it is better and lower scores are often associated with lower risk for investors. Home Depot's total ESG risk score includes ESG: 14.87 socially conscious investors use ESG scores to screen whether their investments are in line with their worldview and Home Depot's overall rating is 14.87 (as of 01/01/2019) - landing in 8 percent of companies ranked in the same sector. ESG scores are increasingly used to assess the level of risk that companies such as Home Depot touch on areas of the environment (carbon footprint, resource utilization, etc.), social (health and safety, human rights, etc.) and governance (anti-corruption, tax transparency, etc.). This may suggest that Home Depot is a leader in the sector of environmental impact. Home Depot's social score: 8.66/100 Home Depot's social score at 8.66 puts it in the 5th percentile of companies ranked in the same sector. This may suggest that Home Depot is a leader in its sector when it comes to caring for workers and communities that are affected. Home Depot's regulatory rating: 5.07/100 Home Depot's regulatory rating puts it in the 5th percentile of companies ranked in the same sector, which may suggest that Home Depot is a leader in its sector when it comes to responsible management and strategy and a lower level of risk exposure. Home Depot's controversial rating: 2/5 ESG rating also assesses any incidence of controversy that the company is involved in. Home Depot scored 2 out of 5 for the controversy - the second highest score possible reflects that the Home Depot has largely managed to keep its nose clean. Total ESG Score 14.87 Total ESG Percentage Tile 8.2 Environmental Score 6.14 Environmental Points 5 Social Score 8.66 Social Score 5 Governance Points 5.07 Percentage Rating 5 Percent Content 2 Level Of Controversy 2 48% Rate Dividend payment: 48.15% of recent net profit. The Home Depot has paid off, on average, approximately 48.15% of net profit as dividend, allowing analysts to estimate the annual dividend yield in advance of 2.11% of the current share value, which means that more than a year depends on the recent payout (which sadly there is no guarantee of future payouts). Home Depot shareholders can enjoy a 2.11% return on their shares in the form of a dividend. In the case of Home Depot, which currently equates to about $6 per share. While Home Depot's payout ratio may seem fairly standard, it's worth remembering that Home Depot may invest the rest of its net profit to grow in the future. Home Depot's latest dividend payment is December 17, 2020. Have home depot shares ever split? Home Depot's shares were divided by a 3:2 basis on December 31, 1999, so if you owned the shares twice the day before the split the next day, you will own 3 shares. However, indirectly, the new 33.3% share price may affect the market appetite for Home Depot shares, which may affect Home Depot's share price, home depot stock fluctuations over the past 12 months.
